times; my friends repeated to me all the old traditions; they told me the stories of all the great families of the neighborhood; and every family, story, and tradition was interwoven with the local recollections of the immortal Shakespeare. We were walking toward the green park where the young poet shot the deer, for which he had to fly to London; and that act of trespass was represented as the occasion of transforming the country rhymester into the first and foremost of the English, and indeed, of the world's, poets. We went far enough to see the famous deer-park but did not walk to it. Having mounted the highest hill in the neighborhood, from whose summit we could see the whole valley of the Avon, and immense regions of hills and forests far beyond, we made a turn to our left, then to the right, passing over several beautiful plantations, witnessing as we went many specimens of the rural life of English gentlemen, and returning to Stratford as the town began to become a little dim with the shadows of a glorious summer evening.

Next morning I went out alone to see the house where Shakespeare was born. The photographs of it are sold in all markets, and therefore I need not describe it. In the Crystal Palace at Sydenham there is a perfect facsimile of the antique Cottage; but there is nothing like seeing the original. Here is the very house where his father and his mother lived. Here is the little upper room where his eyes first saw the light of life. Here is the dining-room, with its wide, old-fashioned fire-place, where he sat at table when he was a romping youth. Here is the old-time kitchen, where his long winter evenings were doubtless spent, and where his first lessons in human nature were taken by studying his mother's kitchen-maids, as they laughed and talked and dallied with their work. Here, too, in other rooms below and larger ones above, are stored all the relicues of his manhood—his seal, his two autographs, the only extant letter addressed to him, the title-deed of his property in Stratford, numerous portraits and busts, together with the earliest editions of his works—all kept with pious care under glass cases held down by faithful lock and clasp. This collection of relicues, known as the Shakespearian Museum, would well repay a visit over the Atlantic.

By the time I had finished the Shakespearian cottage, my friend Smith and joined me, so, taking a splinter from the toll-room where the bard was born, and a few round pebbles from his father's garden, we proceeded together to look upon the house where the poet lived after he had made his reputation and his fortune. This stands nearly opposite as I have said to his favorite inn, the Falcon. Here he lived many and many a year, and from this locality, known as New Place, he was carried to the church-yard. Again, therefore, we rambled through that portion of the town that leads one to the sacred edifice where the great bard lies awaiting his second immortality. Removing our hats, we walk with religious reverence through the audience room, and come to the recess behind the choir, where the noble dust is laid. Shakspeare had his wife side by side. A bust of the great poet looks down upon their tombstones from the adjacent wall. The slabs lie even with the raised dais and perpendicular to the altar. Taking my seat on one of the altar-steps, I copied the inscriptions cut in the solid marble:

Judicio Pylium, genio Socratem, arte Maronem,
Terra tegit, populus mœret, Olympus habet.
Stay passenger, why goest thou so fast?
Read if thou canst whom envious Death hath plac'd
Within this monument, Shakspeare: with whom
Quick Nature died: whose name doth deck ye tomb
Far more than cost: sith all yt he hath writ
Leaves living art but page, to serve his wit.
Obit Anno Dni 1616.
Ætatis 53. Die 23 April.

That is the inscription under the bust of Shakespeare, placed high against the wall of the room. This is the lettering on his wife's tombstone:—

Heere resteth interred ye Body of Anne, wife of William Shakspeare, who departed this life the 6th day of Aug. 1623, being ye age of 67 years.

Ilum, in mater, in hac vitamque dedisti,
Quo mihi pro tanto munere, mortem refers
Quam mihi, tum, ut habiam, tumulo hanc sumo
A terra Cineris corpus tumqo tuo.
Sed quid vota? Deus terra, Cinis dolo pulverq.
Et nihil est tumulo mortis et mortis opus.

No higher eulogy could be pronounced on woman. But the interest culminates when we read on the poet's gravestone, in simple English, his last wish to be left to sleep undisturbed till the resurrection:

"Good friend, for Jesus sake forbeare
To digge the dust inclosed heare;
Blest be ye man yt spares thes stones,
And curst be he yt moves my bones."

There, beneath that foot-worn slab, the dust of Shakespeare still lies undisturbed. No one has had a wish to move his bones. The very stone has been spared for two centuries and a half. It will be kept inviolate forever. At one time, the American admirers of the great poet, seeing how his tomb and his shrine had been neglected by his countrymen, proposed to buy the cottage, the relicues, and everything connected with his memory capable of being moved, that we might honor them in a deserving manner on this side of the Atlantic. The proposal was not accepted. The bones could not be touched. An English society was at once organized to take better care of the memorials of the illustrious dead. Everything is now settled for eternity. Shakespeare and his wife will sleep here in quiet. The last of their race, the Miss Hathaway now living, will soon pass away. But the name and fame of the sweet bard of Stratford, the greatest of all dramatists, the teacher and prophet of human nature,—the deer-killer, the sonnet-maker, the play-wright, the poetical philosopher,—who began poor, and died young with only thirty thousand dollars in his pocket—who was never in a king's palace—who never held the smallest office—whose birthplace was ignored by never a title—whom the royal and noble houses of his country never recognized—will be remembered when everything of England will be forgotten, when her highest nobility will cease to be known in history, and forever wax more and more glorious as they pass onward through all coming generations. Such is the wholesomeness of worldly greatness; such the superior birthright of real genius.

POLITICAL MASQUERADING.

The familiar fable of the ill-favored bird which attempted to disguise its ugliness and become a thing of beauty, by sticking a few discarded feathers in its tail, has found a striking application in the recent performances of the Democratic party in this State. Notwithstanding its bitter and unrelenting hostility to everything and everybody engaged in the vigorous prosecution of the war, which it characterized as a tyrannical, disgraceful and unholy assault upon the constitutional rights of the South, regardless of its denunciation of the soldiers as the mercenary hirelings of a despotic despotism, and its constant sympathy with the rebels who were slaughtering thousands of the brave boys who hastened to the field at the summons of patriotism, it still seizes with avidity upon every opportunity of deriving advantage from the reflected glory of a success achieved in spite of its hostility, and is now striving to drown the echoes of its past treason by lustily shouting the watch-words of our victories.

It is amusing to watch the fantastic efforts which are made to deceive a public whose eyes are wide open, and who can detect the old Democratic gray, through all its flimsy disguises. A Gubernatorial candidate, thrust ostentatiously forward, and the roll of drums and salvos of artillery—trapped out in "all the pomp and circumstance of glorious war"—may answer as a campaign figure-head for the party; but the people, who know the record, look beyond the decoy, and recognize in the venomous editor of the Democrat—who has compelled the emphatic endorsement of his party—the true exponent of Democratic principles, which are to-day as bitterly opposed to every triumph of popular liberty, as they were uncompromisingly hostile to every effort of the Government in its contest with the slave-drivers' rebellion.

The two nominations made in this city might not be considered incongruous in themselves, were it not for the manner in which they were put forward—on all sides acknowledged representative of the Copperhead element, which permeates and controls the party, and the determination of the true Democracy, who opposed the war in imitating for the Union cause, to show that their selection was not prompted by the assumption, that the outrage inflicted upon their brethren in the South by the one, was more than even, in the eyes of the industrious section of the other.

So far as the young Democracy are supposed to operate any preponderance, they are certainly unrepresented by Gen. Roberts for Portland, where, if it is to be the standard of royal, Gen. Roberts was the hero to array himself against the man who, side by side with such old heroes as Farley and Emery, aided the selection of the two within twenty-four hours, show that they understood together since, as they did at the outset.

The ringing phrases of the camp and the spirited quotations from Grant's military orders, which found such place with the Convention and which are now regarded with unwonted freedom in Democratic newspaper columns, must be taken with the qualifications afforded by the editor's language indulged in so constantly during the war, and especially by the patriotic editorial on Congressional honors in this district.

This political masquerading may serve the purpose of gulling a few, but the Democrat but will deceive no one who is not anxious to be cheated. The record of the Democratic party has been so plain, its aims so unmistakable, and its course so thoroughly understood by the public at large, that the attempt to disguise it, by decorating it with epaulets and buckling on the flashing blade of the warrior, will prove a signal, futile and disastrous, as that of its ludicrous prototype of the fable.

The N. Y. Evening Post refers to the recent Democratic nomination in this District as follows:—

Mr. Emery was throughout the war a violent rebel partisan, and his newspaper, the Bangor Democrat, was seized and for a time suppressed by the infuriated friends of the Union in the first Bull Run battle, for its treasonable indecent and unpatriotic manner in which it treated the Union cause. He never seemed to have been a drag upon the democratic party, and this action of the party in his district last year when they have an opportunity to make heavy gains throughout the State, will serve to counterbalance a good many error on the other side. Mr. Peters, who was elected in 1868 by a majority of nearly five thousand in that district, will find the battle he fought and won with this nominee in.

POLITICAL AND PERSONAL.

The Attorney-General has appointed Joseph A. Ware special counsel with regard to the cotton cases before the U. S. Court of Claims.

A telegram states the President will not return to Washington this month, unless called by important public business.

Gov. Hoffman has directed that an election be held in the 28th Congressional District of New York, in November, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Judge Noah Davis.

A combination of the ultra free-traders of New York, are preparing to bring out Jackson F. Schultz of that city as a candidate for Governor.

The Democratic State Convention of Georgia which met on Wednesday, adopted a platform condemning the present State Administration and pledging the party to do all in its power to secure a free and fair election. Negroes are qualified to vote under existing laws.

The Republican County Convention was held at Skowhegan, Thursday, and the following candidates were nominated:—Frank H. Webster, of St. Albans, and Capt. Moses Walton, of Solon, Senators; Sp. J. Walton, New Portland, County Attorney; John Russell, Jr., of Skowhegan, County Commissioner; J. W. Madison, County Treasurer. A resolution was passed favoring the interests of Maine in the return of Lot M. Morrill to the Senate, which was unanimously passed. In the evening a large audience was addressed by Speaker Blaine.

A Commodore Vanderbilt was entering Congress Hall, Saratoga, Tuesday evening, he fell in an apoplectic fit. He was immediately carried into the room and physicians summoned. Two physicians of New York were sent for and are expected daily. It is probable, no one else being allowed to see him. Every effort is being made to keep the affair quiet and hush it up. It is supposed that the excitement at the races brought on the attack, and from appearances the Commodore lies in a very precarious condition. A later dispatch states the above to be a hoax intended to effect the stock market.

The Cumberland County Republican Convention met in Portland, Wednesday, and was organized by the choice of James M. Palmer of Portland, as Chairman, 160 delegates present. E. N. Berry of Portland, was re-nominated for Sheriff, and Thomas Pennell of Harpswell for County Treasurer, Col. Charles P. Mattocks of Portland, County Attorney, and G. E. Chadbourne of Bridgton, for County Commissioner. The nomination of Senators resulted as follows: S. F. Perley of Bridgton, M. D. L. Land of Standish, Charles J. Morris of Portland, and Henry Carvill of Brunswick. A resolution was passed, expressing a preference for Governor Chamberlain as the Republican candidate for U. S. Senator.

TELEGRAPHIC

TO THE Whig & Courier.

THE WAR IN EUROPE.

The French Claiming Victories!

Prussian Sympathies Tending Toward France.

GEN. TROCHU IN COMMAND AT PARIS.

NEWS FROM THE FRONT.

IMMENSE FORCES ENGAGED ON BOTH SIDES.

EXECUTION OF SPIES AT VINCINNES.

THE BATTLE OF LONGUEVILLE.

The Demands of Prussia.

DETAILS OF THE LATE BATTLES.

LONDON OPINIONS.

New York, Aug. 19. The World's special telegram to-day from London last night, reviewing the events for the last two or three days, says: The purpose of Prince Frederick Charles who commanded the Prussians, seems to have been to cut off the army of Bazaine from Verdun and Chalons. There can be no doubt of its future.

For the first time since the war began, the Prussian embassy here has no news good or bad to give.

The general opinion at the military clubs is that Bazaine & Trochu have outgeneralled the Prussians. There is a faint hope in some quarters that mutual exhaustion may lead to an armistice. From Luxembourg I hear that in the battles of Tuesday the Brandenburgers and Pomeranians, the finest of the Prussian troops, were literally decimated, and of the Prussian Guard not one full regiment remained fit for service.

The feeling in Paris has improved immensely during the past two or three days, though great indignation still exists against the Legislative body.

Gen. Trochu is extremely popular, and seems to be more trusted than any other personal high command.

EXECUTION OF RIOTERS.

The inquiry into the recent riots goes on, a dozen persons were this morning sentenced by court martial and shot at Vincennes.

It is certain that the Prussian loan is a failure in Frankfort, none of it has been given out by Government agents.

PUBLIC FEELING IN RUSSIA.

From Pesth the news is almost menacing. There was a demonstration yesterday of Students in favor of action against Prussia.

Active negotiations, the purport of which is unknown are going on between St. Petersburg and Vienna.

A special agent from the new Turkish minister is daily expected in London.

WAR AND ALEXANDRIA.

The Prince and Princess of Wales are enthusiastic in their almost open sympathy with the French. The Prince's feeling is said to rest on a great dislike of his brother-in-law, the Crown Prince of Prussia.

GEN. TROCHU IN PARIS.

New York, Aug. 19. Last evening's special of the Courier des Etats from Paris, closes as follows:

Official News—Gen. Trochu, after having organized the army at Chalons yesterday, was appointed Generalissimo-in-Chief of the forces assisted at Paris and its vicinity. He arrived this morning and this afternoon issued his proclamation, enjoining all good citizens to forget their political differences and think of nothing but the defence of their country.—This evening he inspected the fortifications. The arrival of Trochu could never have been more opportune. It calmed immediately the uneasy discontent in some of the Faubourgs. To-day our modern Lancret is the most popular man in France without exception.

THE NEWS FROM THE FRONT.

There is extreme confusion in the dispatches from the army, all of which indicate that we have gained positive advantage in a dozen different localities, but do not mention one brilliant decisive victory at a given point. This at least is proved to my satisfaction, that Bazaine will not deliver the grand battle until he reaches Chalons. He has been reinforced by a part of the troops there assembled.

THE RETREAT TO CHALONS.

From dispatches which, I have seen it appears that the French army is advancing on Chalons in three lines. Each time the first line is attacked in the march, the second and third throw themselves on the ads. threatened point, join in the combat, and continue their retreat after having gained the advantage.—This is faithfully has been the case in the action since the 14th.

THE PRUSSIANS REPEATEDLY REPULSED.

Five bloody engagements have taken place, and each time we have repulsed the enemy, after having inflicted on him very heavy losses. Frossard and Bataille are wounded, the latter seriously. The armies of Prince Charles, and Stemmetz are decimated, but constant reinforcements have arrived for the army of the Prince Royal. McMahon with a part of his advance guard has arrived at Vitry le Francois, and is marching rapidly on Chalons, where he has dispatched two divisions to protect his junction. At Strasbourg Palsbourg and Thionville the enemy have been repulsed.

These dispatches were only permitted to be sent through the efforts of influential friends.

The Ministry state that Bazaine is less fertile of telegraphic mistakes which would be reported to the enemy, than of the effect of the effect of publishing the names of the killed and wounded upon their families, and the people.

PALIKAO'S STATEMENT.

Paris, Aug. 19. In the Corps Legislatif last night, Palikao informed the Corps that it was certain that the Prussians suffered severely in the late engagements. Their cavalry has been especially crippled. They had tried to retreat to St. Michael, but had not been able yet to effect a junction with the Prince Royal with an entire regiment.

BISMARCK'S REGIMENT DESTROYED.

The Cuirassiers, under Count Von Bismarck, were totally destroyed near Schlettstadt.

The Count then dwelt upon the fact that a dispatch from Brussels, emanating from Prussian sources, made no mention of these French victories. His remarks were received enthusiastically, by the deputies.

TUESDAY'S BATTLE.

General Headquarters, Paris, Aug. 18.—5 p. m. In Tuesday's encounter, the corps of Gen. Le Admiralte formed the extreme right of the army. A battalion of the 73d regiment of the line destroyed a Prussian regiment of lancers and took its colors. There have been many brilliant cavalry charges, in one of which Gen. La Grand was killed at the head of his division. Gen. Montha is missing. Prussian General Darling and Weitel were killed, and General Von Rouch and Greontor were wounded. Prince Albert of Prussia, commanding cavalry, was killed. The following was received this morning: We were masters of the position previously occupied by the enemy. On the morning of the 17th several combats with the rear guard took place near Gravelotte. The force of the enemy in Tuesday's battle may be approximately estimated at 150,000 men. We have not yet the exact figures of our losses.

THE BLOCKADE.

London, 19. A Hamburg letter says that the people there were quite reconciled to the blockade, adopting their business to its requirements.

The Morning Post says, semi-officially that no peace negotiations are afoot.

FROM BERLIN.

The Times publishes the following special from Berlin:

The French army has been signally defeated a victory of the Prussians at Marsle Tour. The main body has been forced back upon Metz and brought to a stand by the first and second German armies under Prince Frederick Charles and Gen. Steinmetz. The road is now open to Chalons. For the Crown Prince who had only Gen. Trochu and some fragments of Marshal McMahon's corps to encounter on the way, the decisive event depends.

EXECUTION OF SPIES.

Paris, Aug. 19. The Journal du Havre says that 19 Prussian spies have been lately arrested, after a trial and condemnation by the council of war, were shot at Fort De Montecouge. Among the executed were five officers of the enemy.

NAPOLEON'S MANCHARIA.

New York, Aug. 19. The following is from private sources:

London, Aug. 19—11:30 a. m. A dispatch from Brussels says that Napoleon left Sedan for fabrite monomania, and cries out that he was betrayed.

A dispatch from Berlin states that Marshal Bazaine must cut his way through the Prussian army or the army of the Rhine will be forced to capitulate.

THE BATTLE OF LONGUEVILLE.

Paris, 19. The Havas has the following details of the battle of Longueville:

The battle occurred at Borny, four kilometres from Metz, and not at Longueville, as has been stated. The battle took place Sunday. Half our army, which was nearly 200,000 strong, were passing the Moselle at that place. The Prussians to do a portion of the attacked about the hour of noon. The corps of Generals L. Admiralte and Decaen were able to force the enemy in short half an hour from the time the first attack was made, and who came within range of the guns of Fort St. Julien, which also opened fire, increasing the loss of the enemy. The Prussians then attacked another point of our position, which was defended by only one regiment of infantry and a masked battery for Mitrailleur. The latter immediately undertook and made great havoc in the ranks of the Prussians. The firing ceased at half past 7, in the evening, having lasted from 4 o'clock. We lost about a thousand killed and perhaps as many wounded. The Prussians sent a flag of truce, demanding an armistice for the purpose of burying the dead. It was refused. They admitted a loss of 8000 killed. In this battle the first corps of Prussian was commanded by Gen. Montenfel, and the seventh corps by Count De Zastrow. They had 50,000 infantry, 8000 cavalry and 84 guns.

THE PRUSSIAN DEMAND.

London, Aug. 19. Special telegraphic dispatches direct from correspondent at Cologne state that the demands of the King of Prussia are stated to be as follows:

First—King William to be declared Emperor of Germany second, cede the Provinces of Alsace together with the city of Strasbourg to be given to the Grand Duke of Baden, third, that Bavaria receive useful money compensation in consideration for her services and expenses in the war; fourth, that Napoleon III. be deposed, and an Orleans Prince be placed on the throne of France.

THE TROCHU

Yesterday, Sunday the 7th of Aug., at 6 o'clock, upon I know not what false alarm, perhaps only because three or four accounts of the enemy were announced on this side of Stolsburg, the Duke of Magenta caused a general alarm to be beaten, and Sameroe thought itself lost while the officers threw themselves pell mell upon the Faubourg road. Three-fourths of the people went off wildly towards a neighboring forest. A salutary example was set by the Gens-d'Armes and Sergeants-de-Ville. The town's folks closed their shops and piled up the furniture upon carts. Some of the farmers drove their cattle before them, as in the time of Abraham. There were incredible accumulations formed, both of men and animals in houses of operators and in halls and old castles. This moralizing all is calm in town, though an invasion is expected from one moment to another, and no one dreams of a defence against one hundred and fifty thousand men of the Prince Royal. The Mayor invites the bakers and butchers to reopen their shops.

London, Aug. 19. It is certain that Prussia has refused the proposition recently made, looking to an armistice. She will discuss no proposition outside of Paris.

Paris, 19. The Private Gardens, Tuilleries, have been turned into outdoor military hospitals.

Members of the Garde Mobile arrive here from the Provinces daily by thousands.

The Gaulois says: We may now affirm that we have a great General at the head of our armies, the greatest proof of which is his calmness in victory. He awaits sure results before his telegraphs his success. For whole days he has resisted the temptation to announce good news unthinking can compromise hopes he might raise.

Paris, 19. It is noticeable that crowds of people no longer surround the Hall of the Corps Legislatif and the ordinary quiet of the city is resumed. The intense popular interest is apparently subsiding, and much less fear exists. The conduct of the people along the Boulevard de la Villette continues good. They aided the police against the rioters Monday, making many arrests themselves.

SATURDAY NIGHT.

The work day week has cast its yoke
Of troublous toil and careful musing;
The lingering twilight's saffron cloak
Trails o'er the dusky west,
And curfew speaks with mournful stroke
Chimed in the hour of rest.

From fallow fields and woody dells,
The cricket chirp their pleasant lays,
The kine come off with tinkling bells,
Through all the long summer days;
And buckets drip by busy wells,
And ruddy ingles blaze.

His whistling wheel the miller stops,
Thereafter his shadow will leave,
His wringing at the joiner drops,
No more the weaver weaves;
His loaded wain the peddler plops
Beneath the tavern eaves.

A happy hush, a tranquil balm
And all the week day work and care
Weep lifted off, and left us calm,
Provade the quiet air—
A calm as of a silent psalm,
A calling as of prayer.

For now the night, with soft delay,
Sopas broiding like a louder day
While the last hour of Saturday
Stay in the heaven's west,
And the sweet Sabbath spans the way
To holier homes above.

God help us all, since here below
Few Saturdays are ours at best,
And out of pain and earthly woe,
Few days of Sabbath rest;
God grant us that we yet may know
The Sabbath of the blest

NAPOLEON AT METZ.

The foreign correspondent of a London paper writing from Metz, says:

The Emperor Napoleon did not give himself much repose at Metz. On the morning following his arrival he went, accompanied by the Prince Imperial, Marshal Lebœuf and a considerable staff, by railway, to St. Avold, a small town close to Sarregnemines and to the frontier. Going to Metz railway station about two in the afternoon, and "hanging about" in customary fashion for an hour or two, in hopes of finding a train for Bitche—there are some nice subterranean dungeons of that citadel in which, between 1803 and 1814, a good many hundreds of English prisoners of war passed a miserable death—I was fortunate enough to see the Imperial party alight from the train on their return from St. Avold. An opera traveling carriage à la Daumont, with postillons in yellow buckskins, high jack boots, powdered wigs, scarlet vests, ribbons in their cars, sugar-loaf buttons and all the paraphernalia of the Postillon de Longjumeau, together with a couple of berlines with the Imperial arms on the panels, and the flanks, necks, and ears of the horses protected from the flies by housings of exceedingly fine net work—an American would think—were drawn up at the door of the station, where a few garde nobles, without muskets kept back the by no means considerable crowd. I slipped into the bureau, and wrote a portion of this letter, and was interrupted, as I told you, by a gendarme, zealous in the pursuit of knowledge under lettre de cachet; but anon, there was a bugle flourish from the platform. I stepped outside and just in time to see the Imperial train, shining in its green and gold embellishments, slide into the station. A bevy of general officers first alighted, and, bowing low, formed a little lane for the grander grandees. The Emperor then descended, slowly, and I thought with diffidently (and then, alone and a few paces in advance of his staff, he walked toward his carriage. I have stood close to him on great many occasions during the last twenty years; but I have never seen him looking so anxious and so gloomy as he looked on the July day since I saw him riding along the Paris Boulevards—then, as now, in advance of his staff, and of his age perhaps—on the 3rd of December, 1851. Napoleon III. is not a sovereign who is given to dancing upon a volcano or to making merry with his lords, after Belshazzar's fashion, while the Medes and Persians are at the gate. He looked, yesterday, fully imbued with a sense of the tremendous responsibility he has incurred; of the responsibility of one who has risked his all upon a throw and started on a long journey from Paris without taking a return ticket

A SKETCH OF MACMAHON.—Mr. Halstead writes from Paris to The Cincinnati Commercial.

I was not lion hunting, but accidently ran against one of the largest proportions—a lion just from Africa, too. I heard a man exclaim in the crowd: "Why, there is McMahon!" And sure enough there was the most celebrated of French Generals, the best personification of the French soldier, the hope of the French army in the struggle at hand, and a great popular favorite. He had, as I saw, by the papers this morning, spent a large portion of the day with the Emperor. Parisians have for some days thought that he was with this corps near Strasburg, and his departure is an event. He was called from Algiers the moment that there were signs of the imminent outbreak of war. He was in citizen's dress last night, and with three gentlemen likewise dressed as civilians, but the group,—the Marshal was accompanied by some of his staff—was after all thoroughly military in appearance

They were enjoying themselves with the pretense of being plain people, but their faces and bearing, every feature and movement, indicated their profession. McMahon wore a new silk hat, and its especial gloss was all that made him prominent in the crowd. His hair is white—a soft, brilliant white—and cut close, and his mouschache is also white—as white as Fernando Wood's, but not half so large. He is said not to be an imposition, and so small a circumstance as that he does not wear his beard in the fashion of the Emperor gives confirmation to the report. He wears no, imperial, his lower lip being clean shaven. In spite of his white hairs he has not the appearance of advanced years. His complexion, and carriage indicate that he is in the prime of life. His face is a healthy scarlet, the sun of Africa being responsible, I suppose, chiefly, for the brilliancy of the bronze on his cheeks. His features are not grand, but are refined, his nose is almost delicate in its fine outline and sharpness, and his mouth is sad rather than severe. You can see this expression of sadness—there is something that touches the pathetic in it—in the pictures of him that will now appear everywhere, and which are becoming a popular here as those of the Emperor, whose abounding photographs are one of the troubles of the times. McMahon's eye is a little sunken, and a little blue, I think, with a cheery, intelligent, sparkle in it (that I am sure of) and in his walk he is quick, and in gesture rather deliberate for a Frenchman. Not many persons seemed to recognize him, and he paid no attention to those who did and were staring at him with evident curiosity, nor was there anything in his manner to show consciousness that he was observed. Two or three times was the cry "Vive McMahon," but he gave no sign of hearing it. There was not the slightest symptom of that look of "the hardened despot" in which people who are unduly sensible of the import ance and fame, or of celebrity of some sort, so often disguise themselves

THE HOUSE OF ORLEANS.—Now that the present complications in France may at any moment revive the Bourbon dynasty it is interesting to know who and what are the present representatives of that ancient family. The last King of France was Louis Phillippe, a descendant of the Orleans branch of the Bourbon family. His eldest son, the Duke of Orleans, married Helena of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, May 30, 1837. During the reign of his father he was killed by being thrown from his carriage. He left two sons, Louis Phillippe Albert, Count of Paris, born Aug. 24, 1838, and Robert Phillippe Louis Eugene Ferdinand, Duke of Chartres, born Nov. 9, 1840. The Count of Paris, the head of the family, is now thirty-eight years of age. He has been a traveler and an author. He served for a time with his younger brother, the Duke of Chartres, on the staff of Gen. McClellan in the Peninsula. The brothers offered their services to Napoleon at the outbreak of the present war, but there is no evidence thus far that they have been accepted. The surviving sons of Louis Philippe, uncles to the Count of Paris and Duke of Chartres, are the Duke of Nemours, 56 years old; Prince de Joinville, 52 years old; Duke of Aumale, age 42, who rose to be Marshal of France and had the distinction of receiving Abdel-Kader's surrender, and the Duke of Montpensier. They have been fruitful and have multiplied. They are enough of the family to stock all the thrones of Europe.

GEN. VON MOLTKE'S TACITURNITY.—General Count Moltke has (says a Berlin correspondent) become more taciturn than ever, and as this is well known, scarcely any body ever speaks to him, but everybody waits until he speaks. People here are so accustomed to his peculiarities and solitary habits—evidently the result of pondering over his duties—that they even feign not to see him when he passes. Yet he can express himself very fluently and very clearly on occasions, as I myself can testify, having heard him once explain the topography of the seat of the Danish war. Some few days ago the taciturn convention was broken by an individual who claims to be one of the grandees of the Bourse. "Well," he said, on meeting the general on the street, "How are things getting on general?" "Thank you, sir," replied the general, "my crops are getting on beautifully, but my potatoes are very backward." The Bourse gentleman disappeared.
